

DISTINGUISHED FOREIGN VISITOR:

"Your Squadron have put up some good performances in bad weather conditions at night, and your chief here tells me that you have not lost a single aeroplane."

SQUADRON LEADER:

"Yes, sir, that is true. We have been very lucky perhaps, but all our machines are the new bombers fitted with tricycle undercarriages. Landing at night and in rotten weather conditions is a much easier proposition on tricycles."

DISTINGUISHED FOREIGN VISITOR:

"That may be one reason, but all you fellows seem to take the whole business so casually and yet so capably."

SQUADRON LEADER:

"Well, sir, one explanation may be that all the members of this Squadron were trained to night flying on OWLET tricycle trainers right from their very first flight. I am sure that all the fellows here will agree that it has never been much more unusual or dangerous for us to fly at night than during the day."

Tricycle Fighters and Bombers need Tricycle Trainers.
