On Watch . . .

The safety of the ship at sea depends on the vigilance of the man in the crow's nest. Similarly, continued success in industry depends on a vigilant and resourceful research service capable of anticipating the problems of to-morrow without neglecting those of to-day. Since the outbreak of war the Paints Division of I.C.I. has, by meeting the manifold needs of the services as they arose, stored up new knowledge and experience for the years of peace. The services of their technical research department are available to all industrial users seeking advice on the application of paint to any surface or for any purpose.
