Pitman's for Aeronautical BOOKS

Air Transport Navigation

By Peter H. Redpath and James M. Coburn. A detailed American work dealing fully with dead-reckoning methods and radio navigation aids, with a chapter on astro-navigation and a great deal of useful reference material. It is very helpfully, and for the most part humorously, illustrated. Based on a wealth of experience under wartime operational conditions, this is a first-class guide for all transport pilots and navigators. 25/- net.

Modern Wood Adhesives

By Thomas D. Perry. An invaluable book for all who use plywood and related wood products. It includes useful information on synthetic resins. Timber and Plywood says: "A re-issue of a now famous text-book, it will be snapped up by a great many readers who missed it while they were in the Forces. During the past four years it has become a standard reference . . . lucidly written, with a sure knowledge of gluing practice, and a fine balance between theory and industrial application." 17/6 net.

Modern Metallurgy for Engineers

By Frank T. Sisco. This is a most useful and informative book, giving a sound grasp of the structure and properties of modern engineering materials. The Journal of the Institution of Engineers says: "'Modern Metallurgy' should have a foremost place in the libraries of all technical colleges and training centres, and should be strongly recommended and brought to the attention of students." Illustrated. 24/- net.

Aircraft Electrical Engineering

By F. G. Spreadbury, A.M. Inst. B.E. Advanced technicians in aircraft equipment and engineering industries will find their needs fully met in this comprehensive handbook. It provides an adequate basis for design purposes. 30/- net.
